ABSTRACT

In this article, this article examines the signs of harmonization on the basis of socio-economic relations of national and universal values, that each nation does not renounce its historical and cultural values; the sustainable reality of universal values is analyzed scientifically. From the subject and the purpose of our research, we can say that socio-economic values are formed under the influence of globalization, but they do not completely reject the universal norms, procedures and moral imperatives formed over the centuries. Most importantly, 62% of respondents acknowledge that business-related activities are supported by the state, which helps businesses to place value in people's lives. 69% of them believe that such values are in the interests of national development, and 48% believe that they will strengthen Uzbekistan's international relations. Thus, the ongoing processes of globalization, economic integration, cooperation in the world today are accelerating the harmonization of national and universal values, expanding their functions.
