ABSTRACT

This article attempts to identify the relationship between the basic concepts of modern political science discourse-the concepts of historical consciousness and political consciousness. Some aspects of the formation of historical and political consciousness in the context of the transformation of socio-political relations are considered. To replace the old worldview stereotypes, it is necessary to develop historical, political and ideological concepts that are adequate to the new conditions and contribute to the formation of modern public consciousness. Consequently, some features of the manifestation of political consciousness in the socio-political life of society and the participation of young people in general are analyzed.

KEYWORDS: Consciousness, Political consciousness, Modern society, Public consciousness, Political activity.
