ABSTRACT

We know that onomastics is taking shape as a special branch of linguistics within lexicology, and that onomasiological scientific thinking is important in the formation of a semantic structure, and it provides information on how to name a concept that has emerged in our minds. The first stage in the formation of existing words and terms in a language is the onomasiological process. This process is always addressed, and at the same time it is important to understand the identity of the nation.
