ABSTRACT

In the study of the phenomenon of inter language migration, some arguments are given about the changes occurring at the language levels, about the reflection of the cause-and-effect pattern within the framework of this particular phenomenon of language. This science is fundamentally different from other linguistic schools in that, based on the nature of the Chinese language, it has passed its own path of independent development. Groups of words represent one of the most integrated (organized) levels of language, and the relationship between them is clearly reflected in both forms of linguistic life - both in synchronicity and in diachrony, that is, from one member of the phrase family paradigm to another.

KEYWORDS: Phrases, Transformation, Dichotomy Of Language And Speech, Lexico-Grammatical Transformation, Historical Migration, Contamination (Hybrid) Migration
