ABSTRACT

When we compare some scientific works on Turkic languages, we can see differences in the semantic grouping of emotional stimuli. For example, in the Tatar language, emotional urges are divided into eight groups of meanings, which are distributed differently in Nogai language sources. However, such thoughts should not be considered as an inexhaustible rule for emotional urges, because in our language sometimes emotional urges (pah, pay, hay da bq) are both positive and negative emotions depending on the meaning of the sentence. I can trace the examples that represent them.
