ABSTRACT

Pupils' speech development is also linked to other subjects. In mother tongue classes, students learn about nature and human life through language: they learn to observe, think, and describe correctly what they see, hear, and read. Mother tongue lessons help to enrich children's vocabulary and teach them to compose speech correctly. It is clear that without learning the language itself, without mastering literacy - reading and writing, a child's speech cannot fulfill the task of knowing reality in a systematic and comprehensive way. The requirements of the state educational standard are aimed at improving students' ability to fully understand the opinions of others, the content of the text, to express their opinions clearly and fluently in writing and orally, and not only in the native language.
