ABSTRACT

This article touches on the problem of expressing causality in the English language by means of various conditional constructions, such as causal, temporary and concessive shades. Logical-semantic, functional-semantic and functional-grammatical analysis of means of expressing semantics conditions allowed the author to identify those aspects of it that seem important for the formation of a cognitive-functional model of representation of conditional relationships.

KEYWORDS: Causality; Conditional Constructions; The Concept Of Condition; Concessional Meaning; Conjunction; Cause; Goal; Concession; Consequence; Objective Modality; Semantic Heterogeneity.
