ABSTRACT

This research examines the semantic and linguocultural characteristics of various English and Uzbek proverbs regarding friendship. The equivalents of some proverbs in a target language are offered for understanding them in the other language in order to discover numerous essential new translation methods and compare and contrast their peculiarities in the English and Uzbek languages. The findings and examples presented in this study can assist in identifying certain differences in the meanings of English and Uzbek proverbs about friendship, as well as learning about their linguocultural uniqueness.
