ABSTRACT

The aim of the article is to highlight about the status of the women in the Victorian era in Literature. It includes social, economical and political position of the women in the nineteenth of the century in England, and the data of the reign of Queen Victoria. A good wife should always be ready to welcome a guest of any rank, join in conversations on various topics, and be a charming partner at various parties and banquets. The driving force behind all the successes of the Victorian era was undoubtedly the values and power of the middle class. Decisions regarding family members and large expenditures were made by the husbands, and the views of the wives were not always taken into account.
