ABSTRACT

Listening skills and abilities are developed in the process of working with different types of listening materials and, first of all, with specially selected texts designed to develop this skill. Teaching listening involves working on two functional types of this type of speech activity: listening to (dialogical) communication (face-to-face communication) and listening to the process of direct coherent texts in conditions of indirect communication. Therefore, it is valuable that students should be given more complex tasks - to master three types of listening (detailed, global and selective), while the texts must be authentic: television and radio programs of various genres, television and video films of educational, regional studies, journalistic nature. greater degree of information richness.
