ABSTRACT

History has shown that as a society's intellectual potential grows, so is the likelihood that society can be managed consciously and directed toward a certain objective. And this is what aids in the logical management of society toward a particular objective. It paved the way for a national concept to arise that represented progressivity, the core tenant of great humanism. The problems with the growth and development of a single thought among the people, the nation, and society as a whole have never lost their importance. This page maintains ideas and reflections about how to instill a love of country in young people.
