ABSTRACT

Corporate social responsibility is an important aspect of modern business that is being increasingly adopted by companies all around the world. It is the concept of doing business activities in an ethical and sustainable manner incorporating social and environmental considerations for the upliftment and empowerment of the entire society and the company itself. Adopting a CSR strategy helps the businesses to build better relationships with their employees, customers and the community, which will lead to potential increase in sales and rising profits. Not only that, being socially responsible strengthens a company's brand image and the public perception of a company is critical for its long term success. The CSR initiatives can be extended to various areas of community development. India is the first country in the world to make CSR a mandatory provision by imposing statutory obligation on companies to take up CSR projects. This paper examines the role of CSR in the success of a business. The study examines the CSR initiatives of various popular companies in India and thereby gives a vivid picture on the recent scenario of CSR practices in India. The findings of the study reveals that the companies in India spend a lot of money for their CSR programs and their core CSR initiatives are in the realm of education, health, livelihood, rural development and social entrepreneurship. By implementing CSR initiatives, companies not only can build a better future, but also can enhance the reputation among their consumers, employees and community as a whole.

INTRODUCTION

Today, the competition in the business world is stiff, and it is quite challenging for a company to earn audience's attention and become successful. By adhering to sustainable practices and exhibiting a strong dedication towards social and environmental issues, companies can improve their reputation among the public and thereby can achieve success. So most of the companies nowadays consider social responsibility as a platform to win consumers and create trust with them. Corporate Social Responsibility (CSR) is a business practice in which a company operates in an ethical and sustainable way incorporating some social and environmental considerations. It encompasses a wide range of ethical business practices and involves a responsibility to act according to the interests of society and balance the needs of stakeholders, including customers, employees, shareholders, suppliers, and the community. Companies may choose to focus either on specific areas of CSR, such as reducing their environmental impact, providing free education, healthcare facilities, employment opportunities or they may implement a broad range of CSR initiatives. The specific activities a company undertakes as part of their CSR programs will depend on its own priorities, values, and the needs of its stakeholders. In order to successfully implement such type of CSR programs, the firms have specific departments and CSR teams that are responsible in developing various strategies and policies and allocate separate budget also. The Companies Act 2013 is a milestone in the history of Indian legislation that made India, the first country in the world to make CSR a mandatory provision by imposing statutory obligation on companies to take up CSR projects. The details on CSR is mentioned in SEC 135 of Companies Act 2013. The Act came in to force on April 1, 2014. The Act stipulates that any company with a net worth of more than Rs 500 crore, a turnover of more than Rs.1000 crore, or a net profit of at least Rs.5 crore in the preceding three years must allocate at least two percent of their average net profit to corporate social responsibility (CSR) initiatives.

Schedule VII of the company's Bill specifies some activities which may be included by companies in their CSR policies. These activities are relating to:

- Eradicating extreme hunger and poverty;
- Promotion of education;
- Promoting gender equality and empowering women;
- Ensuring environmental sustainability;
- Protection of national heritage, art and culture
- Measures for the benefit of armed forces veterans, war widows and their dependents
- Training to promote rural sports, nationally recognized sports, Paralympic sports and Olympic sports;
- Contribution to the Prime Minister's National Relief Fund or any other fund set up by the Central Government or the State Governments for socio-economic development and relief and funds for the welfare of the scheduled castes, scheduled tribes, other backward classes, minorities and women.
- Contributions or funds provided to technology incubators
- Rural development projects.
- Slum area development.

Since, social responsibility and ethical practices are vital to the success of a business, a number of companies today perform CSR activities focusing on different areas. They use social responsibility as a way to give back to society and show their gratitude towards customers for their loyalty in the form of projects, movements or empowerment of individuals. This study delves into the importance of corporate social responsibility and shows how businesses are improving their performance and gain success through effective implementation of various CSR activities.

CSR-Indian scenario

If we look at the current CSR scenario of India, most of the CSR programs taken up by the companies relate to key areas including healthcare, education, sanitation, environmental sustainability, poverty alleviation and skill development.

According to the report on CSR by the corporate affairs ministry, the total amount spent on CSR projects in 2021-22 fiscal is Rs 25932 crore. The top ten companies in terms of CSR spending during the financial year 2021-22 are Reliance Industries, HDFC Bank, Tata Consultancy Services, ONGC, NTPC, Infosys, ITC, NMDC, Indian Oil Corporation and ICICI Bank. Giving a state-wise overview, the report said that top 10 states which receive maximum CSR funds are Maharashtra, Karnataka, Gujarat, Tamil Nadu, Uttar Pradesh, Delhi, Rajasthan, Telangana and Haryana.

As per India CSR Outlook Report by CSRBOX and NGOBOX, Of the total funds spent on CSR, hunger, poverty, healthcare and sanitation received the highest amount at over Rs 4532.31 crore. Education and vocation skills saw a spending of Rs 3196.7 crore, rural development Rs 1123.38 crore and environmental sustainability nearly Rs 879.3 crore. Armed force veterans, technology incubators, slum development, contributions to public funded universities protection of national heritage, employee volunteering witnessed negligible spends. The report said that the top 10 states accounted for 47 per cent of the total CSR expenditure. The public sector undertakings accounted for 26.23% of total CSR spend for the financial year 2021-22. According to Statista, the top 200 companies listed at the Bombay Stock Exchange spent more than 121 billion Rupees on CSR initiatives, in the fiscal year 2022.

Objectives

- To examine the importance of CSR in business.
- To examine the recent scenario of CSR in India.
- To assess the CSR activities of some listed companies in India.

Methodology

The study depends on secondary sources. The secondary sources include books, journals, websites and blogs.

Review of Literature

Mohr, Webb(2005) examined the influence of corporate social responsibility and price on consumer responses when making a purchase decision. Scenarios were created to manipulate CSR and price is examined across two domains namely environment and philanthropy. The findings show that corporate social responsibility in both domains has a positive impact on evaluation of the company and purchase intention. Additionally, in the environmental domain corporate social responsibility influenced purchase intention more strongly than price did. It is evident that socially responsible consumers definitely consider the firms CSR activities when making a purchase decision.

Heal (2005) analyzed the corporate social responsibility from economic and financial perspectives. It is found that CSR is an important aspect of corporate strategy in sectors where inconsistencies arise between corporate profits and social goals. The greatest advantage of CSR is that its presence minimizes conflicts between different organizations, companies, surroundings of the company. A CSR program can make executives aware of the conflicts and commit them to taking the social interest seriously. It can improve the staff morale, stock market's assessment of a company's risk.

Branco and Rodrigues (2006) investigate the applicability of resource-based theory to CSR. The study concludes that the resource-based theory is an excellent starting point when analyzing CSR since it highlights the importance of intangible resources and capabilities as essential sources of corporate success. Basically, resources are the assets that a company utilizes to carry out the operations in order to transform inputs into outputs, and can be categorized as either tangible or intangible. Capabilities refer to the actions through which resources are used and that the firm engages in to get something done and accomplish its objectives. Investing in corporate social responsibility (CSR) activities has significant implications for the generation or destruction of essential intangible resources, specifically those related to employees. The external benefits of CSR are related to its effect on corporate reputation. In effect, firms can create a positive reputation if they are able to demonstrate to the stakeholders that their business operations are in compliance with CSR policies, failing to do so bears a high risk. Corporate Social Responsibility (CSR) also has a positive effect on employee motivation and morale, as well as employee engagement and commitment to the company.

Mishra and Damodar (2010) empirically reviewed the impact of CSR on financial and nonfinancial performance of Indian firms and concluded that stock listed firms show responsible business practices and have better financial performance than non stock listed firms. The findings of the study concur that favorable CSR towards suppliers increases their competitiveness and image in the global market that improves firm performance and brings higher returns.

Bihari and Pradhan (2011) analyzed the relationship between CSR and financial performance in Indian banks. The study has taken eight public sector banks as a study sample to check the CSR and how it affects the profitability of banks. The findings suggested that Indian banks have increased the CSR activities over time. Further, the study showed that a positive relation exists between CSR and financial performance of the company. The CSR creates a positive image about the business among the general public that will in turn cause a positive impact on the performance of the company.

Rajput, Batra and Pathak (2012) examined the relationship between CSR and financial performance of 500 top Indian companies in the Indian context. Profit before tax (PBT) and sales as financial indicators, while Karmayog's CSR rating was taken as an indicator of CSR. The results indicate that a bi-directional causality exists between CSR and financial performance. The company which has a good financial base spends more on CSR activities, while CSR activities enhance the financial strength of the company. The study concluded that financial outcome has an important place while deciding the CSR activities.

Govindarajan and Amilan (2013) empirically tested the link between CSR initiatives and financial performance in the oil and gas production industry. Karmayog rating, CSR budget and performance rating were used to assess the CSR performance. The results show that CSR positively influences the financial performance of the selected firms. The CSR is positively related with total income, total assets, net worth, profit before tax (PBT) and debt. The study concluded that company will get long term benefits with strategic implementation of CSR.

Dhanesh (2014) conducted a case study on socially responsible Indian IT companies. The study tried to find the relations between employee perceptions of their organizations' CSR practices and organization–employee relationship dimensions of trust, commitment, satisfaction, and control mutuality. The findings revealed that a strong, significant, and positive association exist between CSR and organization–employee relationships, especially between legal, ethical, and discretionary dimensions of CSR and relationships. It is also observed that social performance is a means of strengthening the relationship between organization and employees through mutual trust, commitment, and satisfaction. Employee's active participation in CSR activities make a feeling that their opinions are taken in to consideration and give them a sense of collaboration.

Bala and Singh (2014) studied the CSR activities of leading private, multinational and public sector companies from different sectors. The findings show that there was no significant difference on the CSR practices adopted by the companies. The only difference is in priorities and preference in launching CSR initiatives. It is also found that an additional consideration exists towards the environmental protection than other social issues.

Garg (2016) measured CSR by culminating the expenses related to employees welfare, donations and environmental pollution. The results showed that CSR exerts a positive influence on both current and subsequent financial performance. The study also showed that the CSR performance of the public sector is better than the private sector and varies across industries. Likewise, CSR performance showed improvement over time. The study concluded that companies must make such decisions that lead to their long term sustainable growth

Framework of Corporate Social Responsibility

The pyramid of Corporate Social Responsibilities is a framework of expected corporate social responsibilities developed by Archie Carroll in 1991. This framework is composed of four different responsibilities: economic, legal, ethical and philanthropic.

Fig 3: Carroll's pyramid of Corporate Social Responsibility

Economic Responsibilities- The first level of the pyramid is economic responsibilities, which emphasizes that the primary focus should be to generate revenue through economic expansion. Without economic growth, a business will be unable to survive.

Legal responsibilities- The second level of the pyramid outlines a company's obligation to comply with all laws and regulations as they relate to the business operations. An organization must comply with society's rules if it wants to operate as a business.

Ethical responsibilities- At the third level, management determines what ethical responsibilities a business has. These are moral decisions that affect employees, customers, the company's supply chain, and the environment.

Philanthropic responsibilities- The fourth stage of the pyramid concerns the expectation of a company to make a positive contribution to the well-being of society. A good corporate citizen is a company that actively engages in philanthropic activities, such as voluntary activities or fund raising, in order to make a positive impact on society.

CSR activities of some listed companies in India.

Results and Discussion

In this competitive business environment ,CSR practices are very crucial for the success of a business as consumers are increasingly aware of the importance of CSR .If the company creates a better public image through their CSR activities, more customers will be attracted. Studies show that customers are often interested in consuming products of those companies which are actively involved in CSR activities. CSR programs make the company more recognizable among the society. This makes it easier to attract potential candidates and also help to retain the existing employees for a long term. Better CSR programs not only attracts customers but also the employees of the company, as such type of activities lead to better employee engagement and they feel more motivated and develop a high sense of commitment towards the company. Studies also show that employees working in an organization that implements better CSR initiatives are more proud and generate a positive attitude towards the company. Thus a company that implements better CSR programs can increase its goodwill and reputation among the public. CSR also helps the company by providing intelligence about different types of risks a business may face such as economic, technological, political and social and offers effective strategies to solve them. At the same time, if a company fails to implement better CSR programs, it bears a high risk to their bottomline and their brand. Their profit and success will also be affected due to their bad reputation among the society.

Findings

- The companies in India gave much importance to their social role and are highly involved in performing CSR activities.
- Every listed company in India spends a lot of money for their CSR programs and it is found that that the each company's CSR activities depends upon their business size and profile.
- The company's core CSR activities are in the realm of Education, Health, Livelihood, Rural Development and Social entrepreneurship.
- The socially responsible policies of the companies attract and retain customers, which is necessary to a company's long-term success.
- Being a socially responsible company can bolster a company's image and build its brand.
- An effective CSR program has a positive impact on both the customers and employees.

CONCLUSION

In the current world of cut throat competition, CSR can be viewed as one of standard business practices. The establishment of a better CSR policy is crucial for the long term growth and success of the business.CSR practices not only promotes the business but also ensures the overall development of the society. So most of the firms in India are treating CSR as an integral part of their business and are engaging in various social, economical and environmental issues. Some firms consider CSR as a means of promoting their business while others adopt it as a strategic option. Whatever may be, CSR is vital for the survival and success of a business. It can be seen as a process that is equally valuable for both the company as well as the society.
